S. ISIDORVS HISPALENSIS.

HE was by birth a Spaniard, of good and honest parents, such was their condition, that they had alwayes an especiall care in the educating of this their young sonne, in vertue in his youth, that hee might bee the more endued with it, when hee came to maturity: For many teach their children the liberall Sciences, not because those Sciences may give any vertue, but because they make the minde apt to receive any impression of vertue: for many mens children be divers and of sundry conditions: some bee of nature not prompt and forward, wherefore by education they must thereunto bee formed. This Isidore was of a quicke
